Established in 1953, the company has grown from local beginnings into a national provider trusted by customers across industries including retail, FMCG, automotive and packaging.

What sets Howard Tenens apart is its commitment to partnership. By combining a proactive, flexible approach with transparency and integrity, the business builds long-term relationships that drive efficiency, resilience and lasting results.

The Challenge

Despite its strong track record in health and safety, Howard Tenens relied on spreadsheets, Word documents and PowerPoint presentations to manage critical processes. This created complexity as the business scaled.

One of the last things we didn't have in the business was a health and safety software management system. I'd been after one for many, many years."

Solution

Chris began evaluating options and reviewed nearly 20 providers before selecting Evotix. The decision came down to consolidation: "We just wanted to put everything together and come away from spreadsheets."

With Evotix in place, Howard Tenens centralized incident management, reporting and analytics. The team initially built a dashboard in Power BI to pull safety data directly from the system, then worked with Evotix's Managed Application Services team to embed a more advanced version within the platform.

This gave them seamless reporting with the ability to compare results month on month and year on year.

Results

Although Howard Tenens only recently went live with Evotix, the business is already seeing measurable improvements.

By loading five years of historical data into the system, the team can now track incident rates, frequency rates and vehicle collisions all in one place.

All our metrics have really improved. It's greatly improved all our statistical data. And we can see the trends a lot better now as well."

Evotix has also helped foster greater employee engagement. Safety observations have risen, encouraging open conversations about safe and unsafe acts. This has contributed to personal injuries being reduced year on year.

For Chris, success is measured in the simplest of terms: "My motto is, you come to work to do a day's work, go home safe and well at the end of the day. And if we can achieve that, then we've achieved our goal."
